What is our course about?
What do we talk about when we talk about religion? This course is about this question and our responses to it. As we shape and reshape our responses, we will ponder other, related questions. How does religion work? What does religion do? Why does religion matter? Is religion necessary? Is religion beneficial? Can religion go too far? What happens if it does?

Underlying these questions is a methodological question: how? How do we talk about what we talk about when we talk about religion? And, implicitly, how do we study religion? In our course, we will perform, and reflect on, ways of responding to this methodological question as we respond to our course’s guiding question. In other words, in our course we will do religious studies.

We will do the study of religion by studying religion: in 2 extended case studies, turning on 2 texts from different times and traditions. To do so, we will engage many other texts, many different methods and theories, about religion. So our course will be an engaged, dynamic practicum—a learning experiment in how we study religion—rather than only a distanced consideration of how others have studied religion.

What do we hope to gain from our course?
Our course materials, discussions, and activities work together in the service of our course’s learning goals:
(1) to understand better how religion works, what religion does, and why religion matters in individual and collective, past and present contexts;
(2) to analyze religious materials and experiences, their forms of expression, and modes of interpreting them using a variety of approaches and methods;
(3) to recognize and appreciate the difficulties and possibilities of studying religion as a mode of humanistic inquiry;
(4) to develop and practice critical and self-critical habits of reading, thinking, and writing.

What skills will we develop?
Critical reading, thinking, and writing skills are probably the most important and most applicable skills you can learn in college. Because they are skills, they are learnable. But like any skill, they require practice. They can be learned, and ultimately mastered, if you are willing to devote time and effort to practicing them. Think of these critical skills as investments that require large initial deposits but that provide substantial returns with interest on those deposits.

What will we read?
Euripides, Bacchae (9780941051422)
Carl Olson, Religious Studies: The Key Concepts (9780415487221)
Peter Shaffer, Equus (9780743287302)
Additional texts will be available on Blackboard. Be sure to bring to class Religious Studies: The Key Concepts as well as the text(s) we are discussing that day.

How is our course organized?
At heart, our course is a series of conversations: among our course materials and among ourselves. Our class meetings stage these conversations as live opportunities for interactive learning, with as many conversation partners as possible. Our course is ours, not only mine or yours. It is our responsibility to engage in these ongoing conversations with the materials and one another.

How will we approach our study of religion?
In our course, we will act as—and become—scholars, studying religion. So we will adopt a scholarly approach to our work. Doing so calls for adopting the following perspectives.

Reflexive awareness
Reflexive awareness means being mindful of our assumptions, convictions, and values, shaped by our historical and cultural locations. These assumptions, convictions, and values affect how we understand religion. Reflexive awareness also means recognizing that the study of religion can be unsettling, since other religions can unsettle our assumptions, convictions, and values. Other religions are other ways of imagining and inhabiting the world: other ways of being and doing, religiously. To study them responsibly, we must bracket judgment and engage their otherness.

Imaginative sympathy
Imaginative sympathy means taking seriously the world of a religious practitioner. It means assuming that a religious thought, activity, or object carries real meaning for a religious practitioner. Doing so involves imaginatively crawling inside this practitioner’s world and understanding how, for this practitioner, this world makes sense. It requires that we take seriously assumptions, convictions, values, stories, materials, rituals, and identities very different from ours.

Critical distance
Critical distance means raising questions that a religious practitioner might not raise about his or her or zir religion. What are a religion’s acknowledged and unacknowledged assumptions, convictions, and values? How does a religious practitioner adopt them? What effects does a religious idea, activity, or object have on a religious practitioner—and on a society? In what ways is a religion significant and meaningful for its practitioners? How do its materials and practices conceive of beings (botanical, animal, human, divine, and otherwise) and their interactions? What does a religion hold as fundamental to human well-being? Questions like these, and the issues they raise, are ones we should keep in mind as we study religion.

How will we orient ourselves?
In our course, we take the following statements as among our guiding principles.

(1) None of us knows everything.
(2) Each of us is here primarily to learn.
(3) Each of us can contribute to our learning—our own and others’.
(4) Learning requires differences. Differences are how we learn.
(5) Questions are usually more illuminating, and more interesting, than answers.
(6) Answers are primarily ways of asking better next questions.

What kind of community will we foster?
A class is a community, in which any member’s actions affect other members. As members of this community, we share responsibility for making our community the best it can be. To do so, we commit to the following communal responsibilities.

Punctual attendance
We will be on time for and attend every class meeting from beginning to end. Attendance is a crucial component of learning, since it gives us opportunities to engage course materials and one another. Each absence after the second will lower your course grade by 20 points. Absences may be excused in documented cases of religious observance or university affairs, so long as you notify us officially in writing by 29 January 2016. Absences may also be excused in documented cases of critical and unforeseeable emergency.

Shared respect
We will be respectful and responsible—particularly in this course, whose charged materials require sensitivity. Being respectful and responsible includes preparing for and attending class, listening to others, appreciating differences, refraining from eating and using electronic devices, and generally abstaining from any activity not productively contributing to our course. Anyone who does not behave respectfully and responsibly may be excused from class for the day.

Academic integrity
We will uphold academic integrity. Because academic integrity forms the foundation of a learning community, it is absolutely imperative that we be honest and honorable members of this community. Cheating, in any form and to any degree, is an affront to this community that will not be tolerated. Cheating includes giving or receiving aid when prohibited, plagiarism, fraud, falsification, collusion, or any related act of deception or dishonesty. Anyone who commits such an act will receive an XF grade for this course and will be reported to the Office of Academic Integrity. For more information, see the Academic Integrity Policies and Procedures (available at http://academicintegrity.syr.edu).

Staying enrolled in this course will indicate your understanding of and agreement to its approaches, goals, principles, policies, responsibilities, and requirements.

What will we do to help ourselves learn and to demonstrate our learning?

We will engage in the following activities that afford opportunities to deepen and to assess your learning.

Active participation

Participation depends on preparation. Before class, spend time carefully reading each text, marking important passages, jotting down questions, and engaging the text and its author as conversation partners. Then in class, comment on the passages you marked, ask the questions you jotted down (and others that arise), and engage other class members as conversation partners. Simply showing up is not enough. Come to class ready to interact with texts and with one another in a learning environment of inquiry and exploration. Then extend our discussion beyond the classroom—onto Twitter, for example, using the course hashtag, #religionunbounded.

Wiki

Our course’s guiding question is a question of terms. Responding to it requires selecting, interpreting, and using particular terms as tools for studying religion. A wiki is a communal cybersite for culling, collecting, defining, refining, and redefining such terms. Our course wiki will be an ongoing, shared project of developing terms. You will suggest and define terms, and you will offer constructive critique to help others refine and redefine terms. In doing so, you will engage and be engaged by others as you make substantive contributions to our collective inquiry. Our wiki will become a resource, one we will develop and use as we learn how to study—and learn from studying—religion.

Performance

Our study of religion, through plays, highlights that religion is dynamic, performative, interactive, enacted in and through bodies. To realize these dimensions calls for performance. A performance offers you an opportunity to study religion by enacting our course texts. You will select a portion (2–3 pages) of a scene from one of these texts and then prepare and perform it for our class. Depending on your scene, you may work alone or with up to 2 partners. A performance requires concentrated study of a text, in contexts, and illustrates performance as a way of studying religion that engages our learning goals.

Making a case

In our course, we will consider a wide variety of terms we talk about when we talk about religion. You will have an opportunity to formally make a case for a specific term’s centrality in the study of religion. Working with a partner, you will develop and then present, in 5 minutes, a compelling, oral argument that makes your case (i.e., explains your view). Your presentation’s aim is to persuade your classmates to agree with your argument. Making a case combines critical skills of reading, thinking, and communicating with your insights and viewpoint and your ability to articulate them.

Learning self-assessment
The learning self-assessment offers an opportunity to reflect on your learning in our course: what and how you have learned and how you have taken responsibility for your learning. For your learning self-assessment, you will submit a report (600–800 words) recounting and evaluating your learning—and your role in it—in our course. Use our course’s learning goals to assess your learning performance. Be sure to mention specific skills and knowledges in relation to specific course goals, materials, and activities. Your self-assessment should include the number of points (out of 60) that you judge best represents your learning performance in our course.

Learning log
The learning log presents opportunities to think and write critically about your learning at different moments in our course. It allows you to think, to think about your thinking, and to write about both in relation to our course materials. In doing so, the learning log links course content, critical skills, and learning observations. For each learning log entry, you will post in your Blackboard journal a response (300–400 words) to a particular, proposed prompt. Each learning log entry should respond thoroughly to the prompt, support its claims and conclusions, integrate course readings and discussions, and show reflection, thoughtfulness, and insight. The learning log is 1 learning activity, in 5 parts. To earn points for this learning activity, you must submit 4 of the 5 learning log entries.

Examinations
Examinations are formal, concentrated occasions to practice and improve your critical reading, thinking, and writing abilities. They draw together your learning and your skills of interpretation, comparison, application, and evaluation. Examinations are opportunities to demonstrate your understandings of and uses of texts, terms, concepts, cases, and questions that our course considers. Essay questions selected from pre-distributed lists will comprise the examinations.

Learning finale
The learning finale is the capstone of your learning in our course. It will provide you with a significant way to demonstrate and use your critical skills along with your understandings of and creative insights on the texts, terms, concepts, cases, and questions examined in our course. The learning finale may not be rescheduled.

How will our learning be assessed and evaluated?
Your assessed opportunities for learning and achievement (i.e., assignments) will comprise your course grade based on the following point values.
Active participation 120
Wiki 100
Performance 80
Making a case 60
Learning self-assessment 60
Learning log 80
Examination #1 100
Examination #2 120
Learning finale 180

900 points

Active participation and the learning finale are required. You choose which other learning activities you will do. You may do as many or as few as you choose. (If you choose wiki, you must notify us via email by 15:45 on 3 February 2016.) We will calculate your course grade based on the number of points you earn, according to the following scale.

\begin{align*}
    A &= 700–900 \\
    A- &= 684–699 \\
    B+ &= 669–683 \\
    B &= 623–668 \\
    B- &= 608–622 \\
    C+ &= 593–607 \\
    C &= 547–592 \\
    C- &= 532–546 \\
    D &= 456–531 \\
    F &= 0–455
\end{align*}

Learning activities are due by 15:45 on the designated dates. Because you have choices about the learning activities you do, we will not accept a learning activity once its due date has passed. Exception may be granted in cases of critical and unforeseeable emergency. No extra credit will be given.

What if I have a question?

Office hours provide you with weekly opportunities to extend class discussions, ask questions, or seek assistance. We (our course's teaching team) strongly encourage you to take advantage of these opportunities, especially if you are having difficulties. You’re welcome to drop by without an appointment. And you can email us anytime.

What if I need a learning accommodation?

If you think you might need accommodations for a learning disability, please contact the Office of Disability Services (http://disabilityservices.syr.edu) to discuss your needs and the process for requesting accommodations. The Office of Disability Services is responsible for coordinating disability-related accommodations and will, as appropriate, issue accommodation authorization letters to students with documented disabilities. Since accommodations may require early planning and generally are not provided retroactively, contact the Office of Disability Services and discuss your situation with us as soon as possible.

What if I have a religious holiday?

You may make up any work missed due to a religious observance provided that you notify us through MySlice by 29 January 2016. For more information, see the Religious Observances Policy (http://supolicies.syr.edu/emp_ben/religious_observance.htm).
Any tips for success in this course?
(1) Read our course texts thoroughly, closely, and carefully.
(2) Read them again.
(3) Participate in our class meetings.
(4) Ask questions.
(5) Reread the texts.
(6) Talk about our course texts and discussions with class members (including us).
(7) Ask more questions.
(8) Reread the texts again.

Any words of wisdom?
“Many are the shapes of divinity.” (Euripides)

“Religion is about what is always slipping away.” (Mark C. Taylor)

“We’re dealing with the important things here. Our faith, our health. Who we are and how we live.” (Don DeLillo)

What will we do, and when?
This schedule is only preliminary, because our course will be fluid. We will add readings as we go, based on what emerges from our interactions with course materials and with one another.
